

My comment is that I certainly approve to be protected. If I wanted everyone to have my home phone number, I would have supplied them with it. Also, it is certainly a nuisance to be bothered at the wrong time especially when you have worked all day long and all you want is family time and you get those annoying calls. I went so far myself to pay an additional fee to my phone company to block calls and it is password protected. If they know the password then they must be someone who we want to hear from. If they do not know the password they certainly will not get through because it would be intercepted. This is called "Call Inntercept".

Thank you,

Pam
